the Christian year was a colourful, wholly engaging backcloth to the life of discipleship, appropriately celebrated with the best that could be found.”

“If I wanted to identify a large part of what the EH gave me as a young singer and a young Anglican, it was a conviction that excellence in worship was not an elitist or dilettante thing, but a matter of taking seriously what God’s people deserved. Dearmer ...believed that every church deserved excellence because God’s people were worth it”.

"It is quite impossible to exaggerate the gravity of the present crisis in religious education. I am measuring my words when I say that in my judgement a more unjust Bill was never produced in the English Parliament, and that it is our duty to exhaust every legitimate means to prevent it passing into law.

"We will hope that it will not do so, at any rate in anything like its present shape, and it is never wise to predict what course of action duty may dictate in circumstances which may never happen.

"For my own part, however, I must frankly say that I do not regard obedience to an unjust law as of obligation upon the Christian conscience. I can conceive circumstances where resistance to the law might be the highest duty, but we hope such circumstances may not arise.

"From whatever point of view we regard it as a Bill that is simply odious — odious in its attack upon the Church which was the pioneer in the sphere of Education — odious in its miserable subserviencies to the worst passions of religious hatred and petty spite — odious in its disdain of parental rights — odious in its demand that we shall be compelled to pay for a form of religion of which we gravely disapprove — and odious most of all in its profession of unctuous rectitude."
